6th NEWSLETTER of the Eco-media project

March 2023

Start date: 01-12-2021 / End date: 01-12-2023

In a digital world, professionals need to guide young people to engage in volunteering activities.

Meet our next steps:

- 1. Development of training units for youth workers and young people to promote their engagement in e-volunteering and digital activism*

Setting our next goals!

Training Units to promote digital activism

Nine training units that cover a broad range of topics related to environmental sustainability, social challenges, and active citizenship are currently under development. The training units provide valuable knowledge and skills related to environmental sustainability, social challenges, and active citizenship. Through the training, youth workers can acquire new methods and tools to engage young people and promote environmental awareness, while young people can learn how to become digital activists and e-volunteers. The training units also promote the use of digital tools and platforms to support youth work and activism. With the rise of digital technology, it is becoming increasingly important for youth workers and activists to be proficient in digital literacy, social media activism, and other digital skills. The added value of the training units lies in their ability to equip youth workers and young people with the skills and knowledge needed to promote environmental sustainability, social responsibility, and active citizenship through digital activism and e-volunteering. By doing so, the training units contribute to building a more engaged and responsible society.
